

Sanisha Taylor
June 1, 2013
En20f p.m. Mrs. Smith

I have a Hero

I have a hero who is strong, resilient, intelligent, humble, kind, honest, self-sacrificing and trustworthy.

I have a hero that does whatever they can to help those in need in times of crisis; that stands up for those around them in times of trouble; that offers support for others in times of weakness; that upholds justice and freedom in times of crime and oppression and that loves unconditionally all their lives.

I have a hero who will cure the world's diseases, save the planet, feed a country, stop wars, establish human rights and equality globally and make each and every person feel valued.

I have a hero that currently helps the sick, the poor, the broken and the oppressed; that works for a better environment every day; that leads a life that is open-minded, honest and humble; that fights for their countries and that save lives everyday without exception.

I have a hero!

I have a hero who is courageous, just, helpful, lawful, compassionate and empathetic and who comes in every shape and size.

I have a hero!

Humanity needs to be your hero because humanity will always find you in your darkest hour, when you have lost hope and faith in mankind. Someone will always lift you up and help you out. There will always be someone who will do the right thing.

This is my hope and faith and with this faith we will be able to treat each other equally and without stereotype or prejudice. We will overcome global hunger, war, diseases and hate. We will live on a healthy planet for generations to come. We will finally have a world where kindness and love are abundant.

This will be the day when we judge each other on who we are, not what we look like; when every one has the right to clean water and food, education and equality; when the world is at peace; when our planet isn't dying and when we can leave our doors unlocked and let children run freely without fear of terrible people and when kindness is a way of life, not an unusual occurrence.

This is my dream for a better world, humanity is my hero and I have the faith that we can accomplish amazing feats, but I can't do it alone, prove to me that my faith isn't without realism, prove to me it can be done, show all those who suffer that we won't let them, that we care and want to make a difference in this incredible life-filled planet.